The first thing code taught me had nothing to do with code

In Figma, a screen is a picture. In code, a screen is the result of some information: who the user is, what they've done, what's still loading.

DESIGN X CODE

Learning to code didn’t make me less of a designer. It showed me which parts of my designs were just wishful thinking.

What I do differently now

1. Design the loading, empty and error screens next to the main one, not later.

2. Name layers the way a developer would name things.

3. Put rough work on a live link early, even when it's embarrassing.
